terms of user interface design, startups are wildly different than large companies. The challenge is even worse in mobile. My husband is an iPhone developer who often has to work around the shortcomings of mobile UI in his field, while our teenage son has been using Android for as long as I can remember. My two kids' lives are very different and they use completely different devices. (All three members of the household have iPhones.) My husband is a developer, so he often spends his time figuring out how the phone UI works. My son (and teenage daughter) have a different set of concerns and frustrations. And this is just in the browser. When you think about touch interfaces on the desktop, things get even more convoluted. When you think about UI on mobile and tablets,
